Tearfund supporters were soaked to the skin at the Broad Haven carnival, despite the dry weather.

Stuart Parker, Tony Davies and Francis Maull were victims of the 'Soak A Baptist' tower at the carnival, which was held in the school field on Saturday 4th August.

"Many visitors and locals to the Carnival eagerly took up the opportunity to throw tennis balls at the target, that if hit deluged the unfortunate victim sitting underneath," said Francis Maull, a victim of the tower, and also Tearfund's Church Representative Co-ordinator [Pembrokeshire].

The event was held in aid of Tearfund's work with those who suffer because of drought in Africa.

"You would have thought that we would have seen enough rain in the UK, but the 3 intrepid volunteers, from Broad Haven Baptist Church, suffered being soaked to the skin in order to raise money so that enough water can be made available in drought-stricken Africa," said a member from Broad Haven.

The £177 raised over the week-end will go towards the target of sinking a well through the work of Christian relief organisation Tearfund, who are members of the Disasters Emergency Committee.
